

WELCOME LETTER

HELLO,

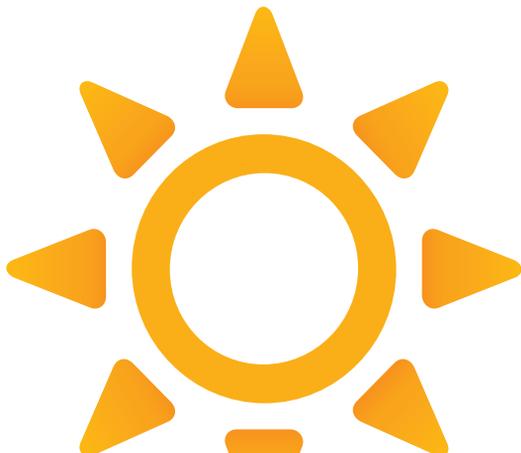

The job of being a parent can be tough at times and we understand that the more we know, the better we do. One of our major roles as a parent is keeping our children safe and healthy. Information is power and we are here to help. The objective of this toolkit is to use what we have learned from other parents, schools and students themselves to help you understand and answer some of the most common questions that can arise as you are trying to help your loved one.

What is the difference between behavioral health and physical health? The overall message is that behavioral health, also often referred to as mental health, is just as important as physical health. Yet, we often do not reach out for help as readily with our behavioral health as we do for our physical health. If we begin to understand that the brain is part of the body, and it is just as important as any other vital organ, it will only make sense that we should take care of behavioral issues as they arise with the same rigor that we manage our physical health.

Another overarching message is, behavioral health issues are not a result of bad parenting. Behavioral health issues are complicated, with many contributing factors. We know that there are ways of supporting a loved one who is struggling and this toolkit will assist you in the process. Take some deep breaths, be kind to yourself and flip through these pages as you need. Remember you are taking steps to help your child and the best way to do that is one step at a time.

WHAT TO DO WHEN THERE IS A BEHAVIORAL HEALTH CONCERN?

What to look for when you think your child may be struggling with their behavioral health?

It can be hard to know the difference between your child's typical behavior and when you should be worried. Look for changes in your child from what you know is their basic nature. Watch for warning signs.

What are Warning Signs?

If you are concerned that your child could be at risk for being overwhelmed with emotions and/or is having trouble problem solving, they could be at risk for depression, anxiety and possibly suicidal thoughts. Your first step in helping may be as simple as learning FACTS: the warning signs to look for.

- F FEELINGS – Expressing sadness, helplessness, emptiness, desperation and hopelessness about the future.
- A ACTIONS – Displaying overwhelming emotional pain or distress, frequent visits to the school nurse, actual threats, unusual patterns of tardiness, or absences from school, concerns expressed by other students.
- CHANGES – Showing changes in behavior, including withdrawal from friends, social activities, anger or hostility and changes in sleep or appetite.
- T TALK OR THREATS – Saying or writing actual threats, things like “I can’t do this anymore”, “I am done,” “I don’t want to live anymore.” Look for writing about or making plans for suicide.
- S SITUATIONS – Experiencing stressful situations including those that involve loss, change, create personal humiliation or involve getting into trouble at home, in school or with the law.

What to do when the school has identified there is a behavioral health concern?

It is very important to remember that the school wants to partner with you to do what is in the best interest of your child. You know your child best at home and they know what is going on at school, so it is best to be open and honest with each other, knowing that you both are working to get your child the support they need.

How to talk to your child about how they are feeling?

Talking to your child about how they are feeling can be difficult. It is important to ask your child how they are doing and to reassure them you are there for them and want to hear what is going on in their life. Listening without judgment and validating their feelings is very important to your child. We often talk about three magic words which are “tell me more”. This is a great way to get children to trust you and open up. It is never easy to hear the emotional pain of a child, but it is so helpful to allow them the opportunity to have an honest conversation about their behavioral health.

WHAT TO DO WHEN THERE IS A BEHAVIORAL HEALTH CONCERN?

Take a moment to try to understand from the perspective of the child as to what is going on in his/her life that could be contributing to such stress or problematic behaviors. Keeping your voice low with an even soft tone can have a calming effect on your child. Include protective factors when you talk.

What are Protective Factors?

These are exactly what they sound like, factors that can support a child during their life. It is best to support and encourage these factors. They can be things such as:

- > A relationship with someone that loves them unconditionally.
- > A trusted adult they can talk with, who will truly listen to them. This may not be the parents, however it is important for you to know who your child's trusted adult is (I.E. Coach, Teacher, Clergy, Family Member, etc.)
- > At least one friend.
- > Participation in community, school, or religious social activities.
- > The opportunity to contribute to others in a "giving or helpful" way.

How do you manage your own reactions and feelings to best support your child?

Receiving a call from the school due to a behavioral health concern for your child is never easy and can be very upsetting. It is really important to take a deep breath while remaining calm and composed. Many times, a child is watching for your response and will use you as a model for how they should be responding to a situation. This is where your listening skills and personal stress management become important. Remember, do not blame yourself, the school, or your child. Even if your child is angry and blaming you or others, stay calm and remember this is not your fault. It is often many factors that lead to this behavior and not just one situation or incident.

It is best not to argue with your spouse or other family members in front of your child that is experiencing the behavioral health issue, as this can lend itself to the child feeling like a burden to the family. It is best to take the approach that, "We are a family and we are in this together." Take it one step at a time until you can get the support that is needed.

Should I take my child to an emergency room?

If your child is saying they want to hurt or kill themselves, or someone else, or they have worsened to the point that their behaviors are risky and dangerous, you should take your child to the emergency room or call 911 for immediate support. If you are concerned that your child's behaviors are increasing, but they are not dangerous, you can call PerformCare at 1.877.652.7624 for screening and mobile crisis support in the home. If you are not concerned that this is a crisis, but are concerned about your child's behavioral health, now is the time to reach out for referrals to outpatient counseling.

ASK

IF YOU ARE CALLED INTO SCHOOL BECAUSE YOUR CHILD IS EXPERIENCING A BEHAVIORAL HEALTH ISSUE, WHAT DO YOU NEED TO ASK?

How can the school be a partner in your journey?

If you are like most parents, you probably have very little experience using behavioral health services. If you have been encouraged by the school to have your child evaluated for behavioral health treatment, or you personally think your child might benefit from counseling, even beginning the process might feel overwhelming.

It is important to remember that the school has your child's best interest in mind, just as you do. This process will be much more effective if you can work together with the common goal of supporting your child through this difficult time. You will feel better too. As a first step, familiarize yourself with your school's policies and procedures (located in the school handbook) on how they handle behavioral health issues to get a better understanding of how best to partner through this journey.

What did my child do/say/exhibit that brought me to the school today?

Ask this question and be open and willing to listen to the answer. It's important to get the details about what occurred. This will help you if you need to get help from a professional in the future. Remember, now is the time to listen and not get defensive. This is not about your parenting, it is about helping your child.

Where can my child go if they are having a behavioral health incident while at school?

It is important to understand who and where your child can go within the school for support. Many times it is the school counselor, student assistant counselor, school nurse, child study team or even the vice principal.

When to be concerned about your child's behavioral health?

We know raising children can be a challenge. But, how do we know what is normal, such as "normal teenage struggles," from behaviors that we should be concerned about. If a change in behavior occurs and lasts for 10 days to 2 weeks, chances are there is something going on with your child that may be cause for concern. As a parent, you have instincts about your child. If your instinct tells you that something is wrong and this is not "just a phase," then you should always listen to yourself.

IF YOU ARE CALLED INTO SCHOOL BECAUSE YOUR CHILD IS EXPERIENCING A BEHAVIORAL HEALTH ISSUE, WHAT DO YOU NEED TO ASK?

When to get a behavioral health assessment and what is it?

A “behavioral health assessment” is completed by a behavioral health provider to determine if your child has a behavioral health need that would benefit from treatment. This assessment can begin as soon as you recognize that your child might need support and you make the call to schedule an appointment. When making the appointment, expect that you will be asked the reason for your call as well as for basic information about your child. The behavioral health assessment usually takes the form of an interview where the behavioral health provider asks you and your child (both separately and together) a series of questions. They might also ask you to sign a Release of Information for permission to talk to the school, doctor, or other people involved in your child’s life.

Once the necessary information has been collected and reviewed, this behavioral health provider will make a recommendation as to whether there is a problem that might benefit from counseling or therapy. In some cases, the behavioral health provider might recommend an additional evaluation for medication. This evaluation is completed by a psychiatrist or other behavioral health professional who is licensed to write a prescription.

Why is Early Intervention important?

What might happen if the behaviors aren’t addressed?

Early intervention and identification can change your child’s path and improve their well-being for years to come. If your child’s behavioral health concerns are not addressed, your child’s behavior might get worse. When that happens, you will likely be required to take your child for an assessment or to the hospital for crisis support and be required to receive clearance for your child to return to the school. It’s important to remember that early intervention can prevent the need for crisis support and required assessment. Just like with a physical concern, if you address it early on you will have more options for treatment and be more likely to correct the problem early.

EXPECT

TIPS ON WHAT TO EXPECT AS YOU ARE GOING THROUGH A BEHAVIORAL HEALTH EVALUATION & NEXT STEPS.

What kind of treatment do behavioral health professionals provide?

Behavioral health treatment for children can include talk therapy, play therapy, or activity therapy. Some children benefit from group treatment where they interact with peers who have similar problems or concerns. There may also be a recommendation for family therapy, which involves not only the child but the parents or caregivers and siblings. When the benefits of treatment with medication outweigh its risks, it may be recommended.

Where do I start to find a behavioral health provider?

If you have health insurance, your first step is to check with your insurance carrier to find out your behavioral health coverage plan, if you need pre-authorization, and if you have out-of-network coverage benefits. If you have to stay within your network, ask the insurance representative for a list of approved behavioral health providers who work with children in your area. If you have out-of-network coverage, your choice of behavioral health providers will greatly increase.

If you do not have health insurance or behavioral health coverage on your insurance that you can afford, you can use the NJ Children's System of Care, also known as PerformCare, to access local behavioral health providers.

What is PerformCare?

NJ Department of Children and Families operates the Children's System of Care (CSOC) who serves children and adolescents with emotional and behavioral health care challenges and their families; children with developmental and intellectual disabilities and their families; and children with substance use challenges and their families. Perform Care is the central hub that all referrals to CSOC services are managed. PerformCare will connect you to the services your child needs and is available 24 hours a day, seven days a week at 1.877.652.7624, with or without health insurance.

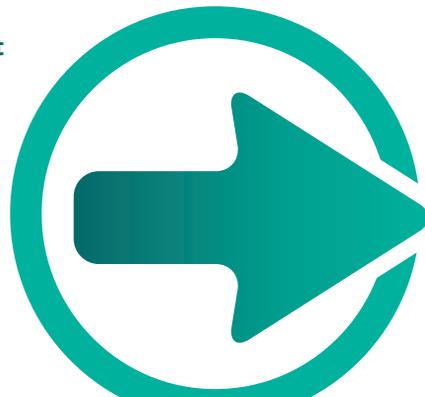

When you call PerformCare, be prepared to spend some time on the phone with them to complete a service need assessment. Through this assessment, they will decide what type of service will be most appropriate for you and your child. If they determine outpatient counseling is appropriate, they will provide you with referrals to outpatient behavioral health providers in your area. They might also decide that an in-home assessment needs to be done and will offer you choices of behavioral health providers in your area.

What is Mobile Response?

When you call PerformCare, behavioral health providers can arrange to see the child within an hour of the call should it be decided immediate support is necessary. Each county has a mobile response unit that provides short term crisis support for families.

I don't want my child to talk to just anyone and I don't know the behavioral health providers my insurance or PerformCare gave me. Where else can I get referrals for behavioral health treatment?

There are many ways to get the names of behavioral health providers who will meet the needs of your child. At your child's school, good referral sources can include the guidance staff or school nurse. They usually have a lot of experience making similar referrals. If your school doesn't have staff in any of these positions, there may be an administrator who is in charge of making these types of referrals. Another good place to look for help is through your pediatrician or family doctor. The American Academy of Pediatricians says, "Pediatricians are, and will continue to be an important first source for parents who are worried about their child's behavioral problems." Other good referral sources can include clergy members or other parents whose children are in counseling. This last source can be very helpful, since you can get a personal feel for the practitioner.

What should I ask to help select a behavioral health provider?

While you probably already have a list of questions in your head, here are a few more questions that may be helpful when selecting a behavioral health provider:

- > Can you tell me about any specific training you have had in treating children/teens?
- > My child has been having some problems in the following areas...Can you give me an idea of what your approach to dealing with these types of problems might be?
- > Do you involve parents (or guardians) in the counseling process?
- > Do you provide family therapy? How do you decide if this is needed?
- > What criteria do you use to determine whether or not a child needs medication? Who do you refer to for this type of assessment?
- > If my child needs special accommodations at school, do you assist in making these arrangements?
- > How flexible is your appointment schedule? Do you offer after-school, evening or weekend appointments?
- > If you or I decide that you and my child might not work well together, will you be able to suggest other referrals?

What should I expect at the first session?

The first session will likely be spent with the behavioral health provider completing the behavioral health assessment by asking a lot of questions as they try to get to know you, your child, and what brought you to them for help. The behavioral health provider will likely meet with both you and the child together, then each of you separately.

Can I go in when they meet with my child?

Even if a professional comes highly recommended, it is reasonable to not be comfortable sending your child for counseling without talking to the person yourself. Remember, you are a customer who will be purchasing an important service for your child and therefore you can go in with your child for the session. It helps, of course, to frame your request in a polite way, for example, "I don't know much about behavioral health counseling, and I'm trying to approach this process as an educated parent. I'd like to ask you a few questions to help me better understand how you work." Please note that while you may want to accompany your child for the whole time, expect that the behavioral health provider will want to speak to your child alone. While you have the right to go in with your child, they may not be completely truthful with you there.

GLOSSARY OF TERMS

Behavioral (Mental) Health – A state of wellbeing in which every individual realizes his or her own potential, can cope with the normal stresses of life, can work productively and fruitfully, and is able to contribute to their community. World Health Organization (2014)

Behavioral Health Provider – Specialists in behavioral health that provide counseling and direction to people dealing with challenges like addiction, physical limitations and mental illness.

- > Psychiatrists (M.D. or D.O.) are medical doctors. While they have the expertise to provide therapy, many psychiatrists limit their practice to evaluation and prescription of medication. If your child needs medication, a psychiatrist is your best choice.
- > Psychologists (Ph.D., Psy.D.) are not medical doctors. Their training focuses on providing therapy or counseling; they are also trained to administer the psychological testing that assists in diagnosis.
- > Social workers (LCSW, LSW) & Licensed Professional Counselors (LPC, LAC) do not prescribe medication or perform psychological testing. Their training focuses on providing therapy and counseling, often with specializations in particular problem areas.

Children’s System of Care (CSOC) – NJ Department of Children and Families operates CSOC who serves children and adolescents with emotional and behavioral health care challenges and their families; children with developmental and intellectual disabilities and their families; and, children with substance use challenges and their families. CSOC is committed to providing services based on the needs of the child and family in a family-centered, community-based environment.

- > PerformCare – PerformCare is the central hub that all referrals to CSOC services come through.
- > Case Management Organization (CMO) – This is the county-based organization that authorizes services and works with the family to address behavioral health, mental health, and substance use issues.
- > Mobile Crisis – Each county has a mobile crisis unit that provides short term (up to 8 weeks) crisis support for families in home to stabilize the home and help child get back on track.

Crisis Hospitalization – A temporary confinement in a treatment facility during which the person in psychiatric crisis is evaluated by mental health professionals to determine whether civil commitment is appropriate or necessary; may be called an emergency “hold,” “pickup” or “detention.”

Fit to Return School – Your school will require written documentation ensuring your child has been evaluated and cleared to return to school. Many schools also require a meeting to discuss plans on supporting your child in their return to learn process. You may be asked to sign Releases of Information for the school to be able to communicate with the behavioral health providers following your child’s care.

GLOSSARY OF TERMS

Helpline/Hotline – Phone, email, or text lines that are staffed 24/7 and have trained staff to provide immediate assistance to a caller for a specific purpose.

HIPAA – The Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPAA) is a federal law that required the creation of national standards to protect sensitive patient health information from being disclosed without the patient’s consent or knowledge.

Intensive Outpatient Program (IOP) – Counseling services in an office-based setting that occur for multiple days per week for several hours per session and typically include group and individual services as part of the program.

Behavioral (Mental) Illness – Behavioral illness refers to a wide range of behavioral health conditions or disorders that affect your mood, thinking and behavior. Many people have behavioral health concerns from time to time. Mayo Clinic (2015)

Outpatient Counseling – Individual, family, or group counseling that occurs in an office-based setting. Sessions are typically 45-50 minutes and are provided by a licensed behavioral health provider.

Partial Hospitalization – A Partial Hospitalization Program (PHP), or day hospital, is a very structured day program that provides several hours of therapy and skill building groups each day. Clients will participate in a daily routine in a PHP, but you will go back home each night. These are typically hospital based and are usually a step down from a hospitalization.

Release of Information – This is a form that gives the behavioral health provider permission to speak to someone in your child’s life and may include the school, a doctor, a clergy member, or other support resource. This is usually a very important component of the assessment and ongoing treatment since your child’s behavior at school or other places may be very different than it is at home. This release will give the other party permission to share their observations about your child, but, unless you specifically indicate it, the behavioral health provider is not allowed by law to disclose information to that party. All information accumulated by the behavioral health provider is confidential.

Substance Abuse – Recurrent use of alcohol and/or drugs causing significant impairment, including health problems, disability, and failure to meet major responsibilities at work, school, or home. SAMHSA (2020)

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

How do I talk to my child about needing treatment?

The way you bring up the subject is important. You need to remain calm regardless of their reaction in order to have a serious conversation. It's common for your child to be self-conscious about what is going on and it may be hard for them to admit they have a problem. It's important you don't shame your child for needing treatment or use threat of treatment as a punishment. Focus on the fact that you care about them and you want to find a way to help them feel better. Ask for their input into the problem and listen to their opinions.

What if my child refuses treatment?

A child that feels forced to get treatment isn't likely to be motivated to change. Talk honestly and openly about what changes you have seen in them and that you are concerned for their wellbeing. Make a plan with them about getting treatment and provide a reward if they comply with the plan.

What do I tell my family and friends?

Talking to your family and friends is an individual choice. Some family and friends might be supportive, however, some might dismiss your concerns. Use your judgment and talk to people who will support you and your child. Talking about behavioral health concerns will help you feel less alone and may provide you resources you didn't know you had. Many people struggle with behavioral health issues so it is important you model for your children that they don't need to be ashamed of what is going on and that asking for help only makes them stronger.

Do I need to tell the teachers at the school?

You do not have to tell the teachers at school, however, it might be helpful for them to know any strategies you are working on with your child so they can use them in the classroom. The more communication you have with your child's teacher, the better they will be able to support them when you are not there.

I'm afraid people will think I'm a bad parent because my child is struggling with a mental illness. Is there anything I can do about that?

We cannot control what other people think, however, many times people hold their beliefs because they don't understand behavioral health issues. Educating others on what a behavioral health issue is will help them understand they are complicated and have many contributing factors. Just because a child exhibits behavioral health issues, does not mean the parent is a bad parent.

What is a safety plan?

A safety plan is a document that supports and guides someone when they are experiencing thoughts of suicide, to help them avoid a state of intense suicidal crisis. Anyone in a trusting relationship with the person at risk can help draft the plan; they do not need to be a professional. The plan should include what put the individual at risk, coping strategies that do not rely on the presence of others, ideas that connect them with people they trust, methods to reach out to family or friends, ways to keep the environment safe, and the number to the Suicide Prevention Hotline. This plan can change as the circumstances for the individual change and can be revised accordingly.
